ROSE AND RUE.

A bit of rose and a bit of rue
The rue for me and the rose for you.
For I am weary, unkempt, forlorn,
And you are fresh as an April morn,
Without desire, without regret,
And I remember and you forget.
—Gamaliel Bradford in Shadow Verses.

WHEN YOU SHALL COME AGAIN.

When you shall come again, then I shall know Forgotten secrets—how the windflowers grow,
And grasses, and the reeds that to and fro
Sway in the breeze, and what bird-mate to mate Sings in the twilight lingering long and late;
Why the moth hovers upon fluttering wings;
Yea, I shall be aware Once more of all the earth's most tender things,
Most tender things and fair!

When you shall come again, there will not be
This heart unrest like the unresting sea
That to the shore makes murmur plainly;
And loneliness that haunts the depths of night
Will vanish as a vision from the sight—
A vision of old sorrow dead and gone;
And there will sound a strain
Like lovely golden music heard at dawn,
When you shall come again!
—Clinton Scollard in Munsey's Magazine.

Some Ideas for Your New Spring Hat

If you haven't decided on your spring hat, you may get a suggestion from the above. The one at the top is of novelty straw in coral. It is colorful and charming with its feather fancy in streamer effect and reaching to the shoulder. The one in the lower corner is of Batavia cloth in tan. It is cut in semi-circular pieces, embroidered in green and fitted together to form a charming chapeau. Pendant scarlet cherries form the trimming.

Harmon and Miss Gertrude Lewis. In the Romance Contest each girl was giving a slip of paper and a pencil, and
